

Freedom to express opinions

Governments almost everywhere in the world are today firmly in the claws of international high finance. Therefore it is foreseeable as to where any restrictions on the freedom to express opinions will inevitably lead.

I myself was banned by the Berlin AMTSGERICHT [DISTRICT COURT] TEMPELHOF from saying in public that I was even only harmed by cigarette smoke with the threat of a fine of DM 500,000 (approx. 250,000 euros) or alternatively six months imprisonment for every violation. You can find more about this on my website www.passivesmoking.org / About us / What we can do for you / Info / A ban on free speech. Even though this unjust ruling has now been revoked by the LANDGERICHT [PROVINCIAL COURT] BERLIN it does very clearly show where the power of large concerns leads to as soon as they have once been able to establish their addictive and fatal drugs or other unnatural products hostile to life: anyone who stands in the way of the drug mafia is gagged by means of bans on speaking proclaimed by courts and/or simply incarcerated.

If, on the other hand, you think that only the wicked cigarette industry aspires to silence inconvenient men, just do some internet research on the machinations of the genetic technology, pharma, nuclear industries ...

All these industries hostile to life and their trade unions have to be systematically disempowered, held liable for the damage they have knowingly and deliberately caused and replaced as far and as quickly as possible by appropriate alternatives conducive to the environment, health and society.
